

SUMMER CHALLENGE

EVERYDAY FASHION

اللوفا أبو ظبي
LOUVRE ABU DHABI

Are you ready for Summer Challenge Week Four?

This week, clothes and costumes in our collection inspire our art challenge.

What do our clothes say about us?

Our appearance is often a reflection of our identity. One way we can learn about one another is by looking closely at the way we dress. People change their clothes depending on different occasions or place.

In artworks, people's clothes serve a specific purpose, sometimes to identify who they are, to describe their personality, highlight their status, or reveal their cultural background.

How would you describe the way you dress?

How does your style of clothing change based on where you are going?

What type of clothes give you confidence? Why?

Let's look at costumes in our permanent collection.

Count Corfiz Anton Ulfeldt in an Ottoman Interior

How would you describe what Count Corfiz is wearing?

Count Ulfeldt was Emperor Charles VI's ambassador to Constantinople, (Istanbul). He is shown standing in a Turkish interior, wearing the solemn court clothes that reflect his duty and status. The artist took great care to highlight the different materials in the ambassador's outfit.

Commemorative Head of an Oba

What other decoration do you see on this statue?

This bronze sculpture expresses the status and authority of the Oba, the ruler of the Kingdom of Benin. The head is crowned with coral beads and represents the symbol of wisdom.

The Musicians' Parade

Can you tell the different groups of people apart?

This woodblock print represents some of the people of Edo. All the entertainers are wearing a kimono, a traditional Japanese garment.
